The first helmet with the SF oval was silver and was first worn during the 1962 season and was also worn for the 1963 season. I'm fairly certain the picture above is is the 11/17/63 game at Yankee Stadium. This pic came from a cover of a 1964 pre-season magazine.

This is a picture of Pete Rozelle presenting a plaque to Leo Nomellini for breaking the consecutive games played record. This picture was taken on 12/9/62, prior to the 49ers game with Green Bay. This may have been (or not) the first game with the SF oval. Thanks to Ken Draznik for this picture.

New York Titans

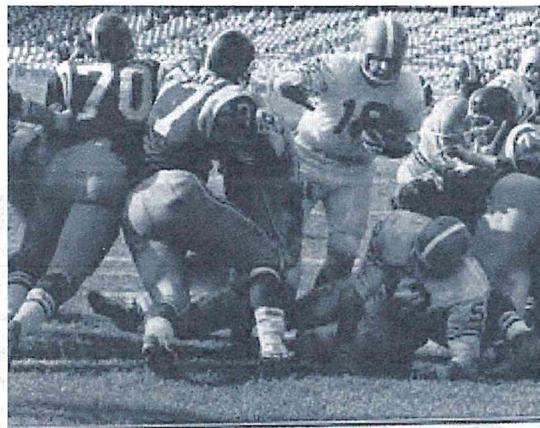

Before they became the NY Jets, they were the N.Y Titans from 1960-1962. Plain blue helmet with yellow/gold center stripe

From a 1962 game program

Quarterback Frank Tripucka scores against the New York Titans in a 30-10 victory at the Polo Grounds in 1962. The Broncos won

They could have easily become the San Antonio Broncos. Or the Atlanta Broncos, Philadelphia Broncos, Cincinnati Broncos. Even the Birmingham Broncos was a possibility at one point. The early 1960s were the most unstable years in the history of the Denver Broncos. The team came perilously close to leaving Denver on several occasions, only to be saved by those who believed the city needed

*Some members of the Miami Dolphins football team actually wore helmets that would be worn in the 1974 regular season during Super Bowl VIII (1973 NFL championship game).

#Philadelphia Eagles, in 1969, were reported to be the first NFL team to wear two different helmet designs, based on where they played each game. The Eagles used white helmets for home games, and green helmets for road games. In 1970, Philadelphia used only white helmets through the 1973 season, then returned to green helmets starting in 1974.

+Pittsburgh Steelers, in a 1962 "Playoff Bowl" game, which was a special post-season game that featured two second-place teams playing against each other, had changed the colors of their helmets from cheddar gold, to black, as a preview of what the Steelers would be wearing in the 1963 regular season.

zWashington Redskins, in 2002, used two different helmet designs during the season; they also used, in addition to the "clockhand-shaped feathers-with-spearhead" logo, the regular "Indian head-in-a-circle" helmets, based on where they played each game. The Redskins used the special helmets for most home games, and regular helmets for most road games.

(As of January 31, 2004, there is a possibility of three football teams that may be altering their helmet designs for the 2004 season: the Cincinnati Bengals, the Jacksonville Jaguars, and the San Diego Chargers, but none of those teams have decided, or even commented, about this happening. In 2003, the Atlanta Falcons, and the Detroit Lions, had altered their helmet designs before the season would begin.)
